Was the Orduna Warned?

In the matter of the Orduna, the question of vital moment is whether she was hailed by her assailant and ordered to stop for visitation and search before the attack was made. If the challenge was given, and the merchantman, seeking to escape, disregarded it, the commander of the war vessel may cite those facts in explaining and defending his subsequent conduct.

The testimony of the Orduna's captain is that his ship was not challenged; that the first evidence given of the presence of an enemy warship was the appearance of a torpedo; and that thereafter nine shells were fired at his vessel. If this course was followed by the undersize boat the attack was in violation of the laws of maritime war. The rule is stated by Oppenheim in this sentence:

"Enemy merchantmen can be attacked only if they refuse to submit to visit and search after they have been duly signalled to do so."

It is unnecessary to discuss the situation of the Orduna, her cargo, her mission, her passenger list. No matter how laden or where destined, she was entitled under the law to warn; to be hailed; and if she was deprived of that right, the attack on her was lawless and unjustifiable.

We Stand on the Law.

Secretary LANSING has described succinctly and explicitly in his paraphrase of the note presented to the British Government by Ambassador Paoli on July 9 the attitude of the United States and its citizens toward not only the Power to which this communication was addressed, but toward every belligerent nation. The essential passages of the paraphrase are in this sentence:

"The Government of the United States informs the British Government that in so far as the interests of American citizens are concerned it will insist upon their rights under the principles and rules of international law as hitherto established governing neutral trade in time of war without limitation by impairment by orders in council or other municipal legislation by the British Government."

This language is not open to misinterpretation. It cannot be misunderstood. It conceals no novel proposal. It suggests no deviation from the recognized and accepted rules governing commerce. It puts forward no new theory designed to alter the customs that have received the adherence of every civilized Power. It is applicable to every controversy in which the United States has engaged, and by substituting in it for England's name that of any other nation it will define precisely every contention we have upheld or expect to uphold.

The principal, the only, and the United States seeks to attain through its diplomatic correspondence is the preservation of the orderly processes of international law, and this fact should not for a moment be lost to sight at home or abroad.

Gold Mining in the Eastern States.

What often makes the Government publications entertaining is the surprises they contain. Who, for instance, knew that here in the Eastern States were forty-five gold placer mines and thirty-six deep gold mines, that the yield from these mines was $173,580 in 1914, and that this production was an increase over the preceding year? Yet that is the report in the current bulletin of the United States Geological Survey.

North Carolina easily ranks first in the output of this valuable metal, more than six thousand fine ounces, worth $131,141. The largest of this State's placer mines is in the mountainous county of Rutherford, and the most profitable deep mines are along the Gashkin in Montgomery county. The production in Alabama has contributed by mines in fourteen counties, of which Lumpkin, one of the rugged north counties, furnished the greatest output. Two eastern counties of Alabama, Talladega and Tallapoosa, furnished this State's largest and more valuable output.

The Tennessee mines yielded more than six thousand dollars worth of gold, less by a thousand dollars than they did the year before. There was a decrease also in Virginia, and the output from Maryland was scarcely worth reporting. The Pennsylvania gold mines have not been worked for many years, and none of the New Hampshire mines reported any production last year.

Some operators profess to see still greater possibilities in gold mining in the South Atlantic States and to believe that there will yet be uncovered a great wealth of the precious mineral in the mountains of Georgia or North Carolina. Whether these dreams of a new Eldorado come true or not, gold seekers find present mines, although their output is less than a hundredth of the production of California, profitable to work.

Mr. Daniels Explains.

Our confident belief that JOSEPHUS DANIELS did not believe what he was quoted as saying—that "when we have assembled the inventive genius of the nation we shall be in a state of defence such as no other nation has ever known"—has been justified by his immediate concurrence in the sentiment which on Saturday THE SUN supplied for him. We suggested that the Secretary of the Navy meant to tell the public:

"When the assembled inventive genius of the nation has devised and put into operation weapons and methods of warfare more effective than any now in use we shall be in a state of defence such as no other nation has ever known."

In his own words, spoken on Saturday, Mr. DANIELS truly apprizes the importance of the board of inventors he is assembling:

"I have great hope that the beginning we have made is really a beginning—the first step in an onward march—and not a temporary spur, launched with momentary enthusiasm only to halt as soon as the first wave of interest dies out."

"No one can tell what will be the result of what we are now inaugurating, but in any event if it is to achieve the purpose for which it is intended it will be through the support of the people of this country and Congress, and by hours and years of hard, unremitting and unrelaxing labor by those who have the actual work in hand."

This is reasonable and sensible; and it comforts us to hear a man in public office talk reason and sense.

Mr. Wilson at His Desk.

Surely in uttering the hope that Mr. Wilson's vacation has served to restore him to complete physical health and that his body is today supplied with reserves of strength ample to sustain him in the burdensome and exhausting labors he will now resume with increasing energy, THE SUN says what is in the mind of every American as the President returns to his desk in the White House this morning.

And should the subjects over which he has jurisdiction and of which he must take cognizance so adjust themselves through his intervention or that of others as to allow him to go back to Cornish for another outing in the near future, we are certain that Mr. Wilson would not be more pleased and relieved thereof than would be his fellow citizens.

Pitfalls for American Business.

If Dr. E. E. PRATT, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, has been correctly quoted as to part of a speech made before the West Virginia Bankers Association, his remarks prove that all the learned nonsense in the country is not uttered by the college and university faculties. According to published reports he said among other things:

"In lending money to European nations we are enabling them merely to keep up their wasteful warfare, and if we continue to lend money to Europe for reconstruction purposes after the war is over, we shall simply be building up our most active competitor. If, however, this money is lent to other countries of the world, countries which are not our competitors, but which are our customers, and also the customers of European nations, we shall be strengthening them, and we shall be strengthening the ties between them and ourselves."

There is no problem confronting American finance which it is more desirable to solve than the problem of making the most productive foreign trade use, now and in the future, of the resources of credit and capital which are accumulating in this country. War born commerce has been stimulating a revival of our industry and general business, and the vast accident of the greatest war in history is furnishing our bankers, merchants and manufacturers with a wonderful opportunity for the establishment of American enterprise on a basis of enduring prosperity through the promotion and maintenance of an expanded international trade. The problem is one of so employing our normal financial strength, multiplied abnormally by the circumstances of the war, that other nations shall be able to continue to buy largely of our products, raw and finished, of our goods and commodities, until happier days have come and all countries are less in need of the capital and credit which we can supply.

The solution of the problem is hampered by a variety of sentimental, political and economic delusions vigorously promulgated, mainly in behalf of a hyphenate propaganda which considers American interests from the point of view of the exigencies of another land. Dr. PRATT's contribution to this sum total of delusion is not of this description, but the office which he holds attaches weight to his words that they do not deserve and can only operate to increase the capacity of the popular intellect to resist the intrusion of a new idea. Quite apart from the knowledge which Dr. PRATT cannot possibly have, as to whether or not the European warfare is wasteful in the larger destinies of humanity, the paragraph quoted from his reported speech appeals only to ignorant and provincial views of international trade.

There is every reason why we should lend to countries described by Dr. PRATT as "not our competitors" in order that they may become our better customers. Presumably he has chiefly in mind the Latin American republics, but these same countries have a huge potentiality of development into competitors with our own commerce and industry. The truth, of course, is that the classification of countries as competitors and customers is grotesque. The best customers in foreign trade which we had before the war were precisely the nations of Europe which were our most formidable competitors; and the strongest of them did not hesitate to lend money in this country.

If our bankers and business men are going to do anything large and commensurate with their economic opportunity in these great times, they are not going to succeed by considering their ventures in the light in which Dr. PRATT discusses the opportunity. Nor because of the part which politics plays in our business affairs is the task of our financial and commercial leaders going to be assisted by the popular prevalence of such notions as Dr. PRATT has promulgated.

Not an Imminent Peril.

Fresh from recent exploration of Hawaii's rich resources in Japanese mar's nests, Congressman W. H. STAFFORD of the Fourth Wisconsin district is back in his Milwaukee home with reports of the discovery of a new laying of eggs which seem only to need the motherly attention of some of our old hen statesmen to be hatched into portents of pending devilry dark and dire.

Not long ago, it will be remembered, we were startled by stories of mysterious nocturnal military exercises on the part of Hawaiian Japanese. Now it appears that the Japanese are pursuing nocturnal studies there in schools of their own. The young Japanese of Hawaii attend the American public schools, where good sound American doctrine is taught, and then, after the regular school hours, go to Japanese schools, where it is assumed loyalty to the flag of Japan and not to that of the United States is instilled. The critical feature of this situation is in the fact that of the 200,000 inhabitants of the Hawaiian Islands 80,000 are Japanese. Of these, 80,000 large numbers were born in the islands under the American flag, and as presumptive American citizens will demand the ballot as soon as they attain voting age.

Thus in a few years nearly half the voting population will be Japanese. Query: In the event of trouble between this country and Japan will these voters be Americans or will they straddle a hyphen and throw rocks down on the American side of the fence? Mr. STAFFORD says that the Congressional commission of inquiry of which he is a member was informed in Hawaii by Americans free from hyphenal encumbrance that there was room for doubt and some uneasiness on this subject. And the uneasiness, it would appear, is largely based on the above mentioned Japanese nocturnal school habit.

At all events, the peril may be pondered in at least temporary security. It is not imminent for one thing, and then we have become more or less lulled to sufferings from alarming Oriental events which do not occur. Sufficient unto the day is the mare's nest thereof. And is not Lower California a little overdue in discoveries in the mare's nest line?

If HENRY JAMES should decide to renounce his citizenship, as it is reported he may, his explanation of his act would be worth preserving.

The one effective way to guarantee safe crossing for New York pedestrians in traffic crowded streets is to mark every aisle of protected passage, in eye commanding letters, "No Pedestrians Allowed," and every lane of thoroughfare, and every lane of safety, in letters equally compelling of the vision, "Keep Off!"

However good a story is there is always some one who will come along with a better one. Golfers who have driven balls that struck birds in flight have always found an audience and attention, but we shall be proof. But here is a St. Joseph, Mo., player who has both bird and ball as evidence.

"Upon examining the ball he found that the bird's beak had become imbedded in the sphere. It was inserted a half inch, with a quarter of an inch protruding."

Wonderful shot; true and clear head-on compact. Next!

Reports from Kansas City say that "Big Muddy" is raging down the Missouri Valley and that its waters have swept over one village, giving the five hundred inhabitants scarcely time to flee to the hills for their lives.

This mighty stream has a habit of carrying away farms, destroying towns and wiping out man made border lines. One of the most dramatic incidents in the history of Kansas City occurred when the Missouri attacked the town, entailing a damage estimated at $1,000,000.
